Pistachio Shell

A versatile shell that appeals to two markets with its decorative look and fuel value.

Pistachio shell is a product left after the pistachio kernel is separated, set apart from other hard shells by its light color and even shell structure. It is collected at low moisture from the pistachio-growing regions of Southeastern Anatolia. Its light, natural look makes it sought after as a decorative mulch in gardens and landscaping, while the same structure is also used as a strong biomass fuel source. This dual use makes pistachio shell a supply item that can be positioned flexibly to request;
